contemporary approaches to law in America.

American politics grows embittered because it is increasingly torn between two rival constitutions, two opposed cultures, two contrary ways of life. American conservatives rally around the founders' Constitution, as amended and as grounded in the natural and divine rights and duties of the Declaration of Independence. American liberals herald their "living Constitution," a term that implies that the original is dead or superseded, and that the fundamental political imperative is constant change or transformation (as President Obama called it) toward a more and more perfect social democracy ruled by a Woke elite. Crisis of the Two Constitutions details how we got to and what is at stake in our increasingly divided America. It takes controversial stands on matters political and scholarly, describing the political genius of America's founders and their efforts to shape future generations through a constitutional culture that included immigration, citizenship, and educational policies. Then it turns to the attempted progressive refounding of America, tracing its accelerating radicalism from the New Deal to the 1960s' New Left to today's unhappy campus nihilists. Finally, the volume appraises American conservatives' efforts, so far unavailing despite many famous victories, to revive the founders' Constitution and moral common sense. From Ronald Reagan to Donald Trump, what have conservatives learned and where should they go from here? Along the way, Charles R. Kesler argues with critics on the left and right, and refutes fashionable doctrines including relativism, multiculturalism, critical race theory, and radical traditionalism, providing in effect a one-volume guide to the increasingly influential Claremont school of conservative thought by one of its most engaged, and engaging, thinkers.

The book is easily accessible to those interested in Middle Eastern Studies, human rights in-conflict and post-conflict situations, legal pluralism, socio-legal studies, law and society, Shari'a Law and gender studies. Studies on women's access to justice in the Palestinian context have overwhelmingly focused on legal texts and the letter of the law. This study examines women's access to justice from the perspective of those women who have resorted to such courts for the purpose of achieving rights, resolving family-level conflict and/or seeking justice in regards to particular grievances. In particular this study reviews the responsiveness of the institutional structure of the sharia' courts in performing their justice function; over viewing domestic legal texts related to marriage, divorce, custody, alimony and other family law issues as well as inadequacies in the texts of addressing real problems; mapping women's encounter with the shari'a court and outlining the roles played by key actors in the sharia' court - judges, lawyers, litigants (men and women), and beyond the shari'a court including mediators or "Muftis"; and finally, undertaking an analysis of women's different varying experiences in shari'a courts from the perspective of their social, political and economic context, and reviewing the impact of these factors on women's ability to access their rights. This study is based on identifying realization of "access to justice" as an outcome of an individual's ability to obtain legal remedy responding to the social, economic and political circumstances under which they live. This type of analysis of access to justice has as its main components (1) that it is premised on the law as an iterative process, rather than set of written provisions applied and interpreted in isolation of those who apply it, the historical parameters that produced it, or the economic, social and political circumstances impacting its application. (2) Treating law as an interactive process does not negate totally the impact of the ideology that constructs the legal system and mantles its provisions. (3) Focusing on social, economical and social condition besides the legal provisions of the law. (4) Assessing the role of the actors and reviewing the impact of their intervention and perspectives on women's access to justice in the shari'a courts. The research team observed cases in the shari'a courts of Bethlehem, Jericho, Nablus, Halhoul, Tulkarem, Jenin and Ramallah. During these observation sessions the research team attended family counseling sessions, spoke to litigants/clients of the court, consulted with judges, court administrative personnel and lawyers, and followed up on the progress of select cases. The study also complement its qualitative approach by looking at different written sources such as the personal status codes and afferent regulations, published collections of case law, published statistics about the court work, fatwas issued by West Bank muftis, NGO reports, media and policy reports about the law and its application. Together, these methods enabled us to arrive at a nuanced analysis of the law in action and women's access to justice.

This book presents an original interdisciplinary approach to the study of the so-called 'recovery phase' in disaster management, centered on the notion of repairing. The volume advances thinking on disaster recovery that goes beyond institutional and managerial challenges, descriptions, and analyses. It encourages socially, politically, and ethically engaged questioning of what it means to recover after disaster. At the center of this analysis, contributions examine the diversity of processes of repairing through which recovery can take place, and the varied meanings actors attribute to repair at different times and scales of such processes. It also analyses the multiple arenas (juridical, expert, political) in which actors are engaged in struggles of sense-making over the "what-ness" of a disaster and the paths for recovery. These struggles are interlinked with interest-based and power-based ones which maintain structural conditions of inequality and exploitation, pre-existing social hierarchies and established forms of marginality. The work uses case studies from all over the world, cutting-edge theoretical discussions, and original empirical research to put critical and interpretative approaches in social sciences into dialogue, opening the venue for innovative approaches in the study of environmental disasters. This book will be of much interest to students of disaster management, sociology, anthropology, law and philosophy.

NATIONAL BESTSELLER The true story of two African-American brothers who were kidnapped and displayed as circus freaks, and whose mother endured a 28-year struggle to get them back. The year was 1899 and the place a sweltering tobacco farm in the Jim Crow South town of Truevine, Virginia. George and Willie Muse were two little boys born to a sharecropper family. One day a white man offered them a piece of candy, setting off events that would take them around the world and change their lives forever. Captured into the circus, the Muse brothers performed for royalty at Buckingham Palace and headlined over a dozen sold-out shows at New York's Madison Square Garden. They were global superstars in a pre-broadcast era. But the very root of their success was in the color of their skin and in the outrageous caricatures they were forced to assume: supposed cannibals, sheep-headed freaks, even "Ambassadors from Mars." Back home, their mother never accepted that they were "gone" and spent 28 years trying to get them back. Through hundreds of interviews and decades of research, Beth Macy expertly explores a central and difficult question: Where were the brothers better off? On the world stage as stars or in poverty at home? TRUEVINE is a compelling narrative rich in historical detail and rife with implications to race relations today.
